refused to testify at the present stage of the proceedings.

After recess Mr. O'Neili consented to testify, and took the witness-stand. Mr. Blandy conducted the direct examination. The lawyer described his visit to the Church street police station and the Merchants' Hotel with Lynch and his friends. He corroborated the testimony given by Mayston in all essential points as to seeing Sheridan at the Merchants' Hotel that evening, and the conversation with Murphy, the lame operator, who was at that time addressed by several persons in the hotel as Burke, the proprietor.

Sheridan, Lawyer O'Neili said, assumed a very aggressive manner when he saw Lynch, and coming up to him, demanded whether he came there to get further satisfaction. Afterwards when Sheridan found out that a lawyer and a reporter were with Lynch, he became very mild in his demeanor. He admitted to Mr. O'Neill, the latter said, in a conversation which ensued, that he had used his 'billy' upon Lynch, but denied that he had used unnecessary violence.

O'Neill testified that Sheridan on that occasion told him that he had been called in by the proprietor to quell a disturbance, and that he found men fighting there. They had attacked him, and some one had hit him on the head. He showed witness a small shraston on his forehead. Sheridan further toil the witness that he had called in two other policemen to help him, and they had limitly put the crowd out of the hete!

Lynch, Smith, Shields and Mayston were all sober at the time. Lynch showed signs of the assault. His face and collar were bloody and his clothing torn.

Mack was the first witness called. She testified that she lived with her himband and baby on the second floor of the house 256 West Forty-seventh street at the time of the assault. The ground floor was occupied by the Ariel Club, a social organization.

About 2 o'clock Monday afternoon, in February, while she was preparing dinner for her husband, McCahill called and said that the landlord was in the club-rooms and she had better come down, as he wanted her rent reduced. She went down, she said, and he led the way through the hallway into the rear room. After they entered he turned and locked the dowr.

"During the fight," she continued, "he slipped a diamond ring off my finger, it was a gift of my husband. Six weeks later I saw McCahill on Eighth avenue and told him that if he'l give me my ring I'd let the other matter drop. He said he never had the ring."

Sailor Pedersen Says That Was the Alternative.

Murder of Sailor Shields Told in Court To-Day.

The examination of Charles Pedersen for killing James Shields on board the bark Duleep Singh, was continued before United States Commissioner Shields

this morning.
Capt. Prideaux, of the Dulcep Singh, was recalled. He testified that he wouldn't trust his crew, and said that sailors generally as a class were liars, and he wouldn't believe them under

"That applies to all sailors, captain?" "Yes."
"Including yourself?"

"Not"

August Reymert, counsel for Pedersen, said that the captain had told Pedersen a few hours before that his crew was a tough gang, and that at times he was in danger of his life.

John Connolly, a sailor on the Duleep Singh, testified to Shielde's d'ing declaration, to the effect that Pedersen, had killed him "for nothing." He also said there was trouble on the ship continually. The sailors objected to the bad food, and there was considerable ill-feeling engendered on that account. Pedersen took the stand in his own behalf. He said the men were rejudiced against him on account of his metalliced against himself himse diced against him on account of his nationality.

At dinner one day Shields threatened him, and said the men would take marilin spikes and knock him down.

Pedersen said that on the night of the murder Shields insuited him by calling him a hog. He made an attempt to strike Shields, but didn't reach him.

Shields ran into the forecastic and got a heavy iron bar. Federsen went up on the forecastic deck. By this time the other men on watch had guthered around. They encouraged Shields to attack him.

Shields ran up on deck and struck Pedersen on the lorgs with the Iron bar. By this time the other men had climbed up on the forecastle deck, all of them armed with marlin spikes and iron bars. Pedersen then drew his knife and defended himself.

"I couldn't get away," said Pedersen. "I had to fight or jump in the sea. There was no way for me to escape." At the conclusion of Pedersen's testimony Commissioner Shields stated that he would hold the prisoner for extradition on the charge of murder. 7.04 49%

Ingraham.

Her Husband One of the Biggest Lumber Dealers in America.

Justice Ingraham, of the Supreme Court, to-day rendered a decision in favor of Mrs. Hattle E. Ducki, in her suit for separation from her husband harles E. Bucki.

Bucki is a wealthy lumber dealer, and the trial of the case before Justice Ingraham last Fall attracted much attention, and was fully told in "The Even-ing World." Mrs. Buckl charged her husband with various forms of cruelty. Mrs. Buckl's motion for alimony was taken on appeal t othe eGneral Term of the Supreme Court, which held that if the plaintiff's charges were proven on the trial she would be entitled to ali-mony.

the trial she would be entitled to allmony.
Justice Ingraham's opinion is very brief. He refers to the General Term decision regarding the alimony, and says that he is of the opinion that all the material charges of Mrs. Buckt against her husband are true.

He says he thinks it will be to the advantage of both parties to be separated by a judicial decree. He therefore judgment entered for plaintiff and grants her alimony of $2,500.

He also grants Mrs. Buckt the right to apply for an increase of the alimony should 'he circumstances of the defendant change for the better.
